Some of you may play Ant Forest, a game on Alipay. Players collect “energy” to make their “trees” grow. When the “energy” reaches a certain level, some organizations will plant a real tree in a desert (沙漠) area of China. And now it seems that the nation's efforts as a whole to make a greener world have paid off (获得回报).

According to a study by NASA, China and India are main contributors (贡献者). The study has found that since 2000 the Earth's green leaf area has increased by 5 percent, or over 5 million square kilometres. That's an area as big as the total area of the Amazon rainforest.

It is mainly the result of a big tree planting programmes in China and intensive agriculture(集约农业) in both countries, according to NASA.

“China and India take up one third of the increased greening, but contain only 9 percent of the planet's land area covered in vegetation (植被),”Chi Chen, the study's lead writer and a researcher at Boston University, US, told CNN. China was the major contributor, adding 25 percent to this increase, while India added 6.8 percent.

Over the past years, China has made great efforts to green the land. In 1978, China began a national-level forestation project —the “Great Green Wall”. The programme has seen many trees planted in 13 provinces and autonomous regions (自治区) in northern China to act as windbreaks (防风林), according to China Daily.

By the end of 2019, the forest coverage rate among the regions of the project had reached 13.57 percent, compared to 5.05 percent 40 years ago.

In the light of China's success in dealing with desertification (荒漠化), the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) believes other countries should learn from its experience.
