How is it that siblings(兄弟姐妹) can turn out so differently? One answer is that in fact each sibling grows up in a different family. The firstborn is, for a while, an only child, and certainly has a completely different experience of the parents than those born later. The next child is, for a while, the youngest, until the situation is changed by a new arrival. The mother and father themselves are changing and growing up, too.

Recently, researchers have found many ways in which brothers and sisters are a lasting force in each other's lives. Firstborn children pick up vocabulary more quickly than their siblings. The reason for this might be that the later children aren't getting the same one-on-one time with parents. But that doesn't mean that the younger children have problems with language development. Later-borns don't enjoy that much talking time with parents, but instead they harvest lessons from bigger brothers and sisters, learning phrases and getting an understanding of social concepts (概念).

Siblings created a rich world of play that helped them grow socially. Love-hate relationships were common among the children. Even those siblings who fought the most had just as much positive communication as the other sibling pairs.

One way children seek more attention from parents is by making themselves different from their siblings, particularly if they are close in age. Researchers have found that the first two children in a family are more different from each other than the second and third. Girls with brothers show their differences by being more feminine than girls with sisters. A 2003 research paper found that those who changed to make themselves different from their siblings were successful in increasing the amount of warmth they achieved from their parent.

People often say that the world is getting smaller. By this, they mean that with improved communications and trade, each country knows one another more and more. There seems to be a lot of truth to this. After all, you can buy African food in Norway, or watch a French movie in China.

However, countries still have the power to shock people who visit them for the first time. For many of us there are still real differences in the culture and habits between nations.

Recently, a Serbian student, Milorad Boti was highly surprised on a school trip to Germany when he found public bathrooms were not the same as those in his home country. He noticed that after using the toilet, the lid rotated(盖子旋转) as part of a cleaning process. Milorad was deeply impressed.

Most often, however, it's eating habits that are different between cultures. When visiting a Western country, an Indian man, Kaushal Barot, noticed people often socializing for hours with friends. Kaushal was surprised because in Indian, restaurants are for one thing only: eating.

The differences in cultures can seem positive, negative, or simply just strange, But rather than something to be feared, these differences should be welcomed. Indeed, if the whole world were like one big country, it would be a much more boring. So let's be proud of our own culture, and at the same time, open to the culture of others.
